8:00 – 10:00 A.M.	Managing Change Through Enlightened Planning and Implementation	Doug/Larry
	A discussion of the importance of positive change: Change is a constant in both our personal and professional lives. Some change is positive: marriage, a promotion, a new job. Some change is not positive: failed projects, failed relationships, lost job. An understanding of the change process will make us stronger and more resilient as leaders. It is important to build an understanding of the change process into our planning process as leaders in online learning. A proactive approach to change management will enable our institutions to more successfully implement new technologies and pedagogies and ultimately will lead to greater student success.

10:00 – 10:15 A.M.	Break
10:15 – 10:45 A.M.	Building Communities as Agents of Change	Larry/Jessica
	The power of leveraging the energy of teams or groups of individuals oriented to a common goal can serve to advance both institutional initiatives and personal professional development. Examining and strategizing the formation, inclusion, orientation, and direction of institutional communities can result in effectively “moving the needle” in addressing cultural, organizational, and political barriers to a goal. From the professional development perspective, identifying, participating in, and leading communities of like-minded individuals can expand the impact of effective leadership skill development. Developing a series of strategies to harness the power of transformative communities requires vision and an understanding of relationships, culture, policy, and processes. How to build communities, whom to engage, and how to monitor progress are important elements of effective communities and team assignments. Likewise, for the emerging leader, devising personal strategies to identify, evaluate, and engage in professional communities can have a “multiplier effect” on career advancement. Determining where to invest time and effort and considering the “risk” of engagement are critical factors in selecting the right communities for the best return-on-investment.
